Benefits and Rewards of Participation in a Sea Education Seminar

SEA Seminars on board SEA's vessels are carefully organized to ensure the success of SEA's purpose: to foster knowledge, understanding and appreciation of the oceans by providing challenging and enriching academic programs that offer the opportunity to live, work, and study at sea. As on any sophisticated vessel, life on board ship is structured according to age-old, proven traditions, and by requirements specific to their work. It is tightly scheduled and demanding, and, for most participants, requires some getting used to.

"Normal" patterns of sleep/work/recreation must be reorganized to fit the 24-hour needs of a vessel at sea. With up to 39 other participants and staff aboard, close relationships will be inescapable, requiring an enthusiastic commitment of energy and cooperation to sustain the good morale needed for a productive voyage. There is continuous activity through the day and night whether conducting experiments or working on deck. Participants experience a constantly changing schedule. Sleeping and working on a 24-hour watch schedule requires patience and management of sleep and free time. The world will be in constant motion and, for most, it will take a day or two to get "sea-legs" and feel comfortable at sea.

Although it will be plainly obvious once on board, participants should recognize in advance that each person's duties consist of real responsibilities affecting the safety and welfare of the vessel and those on board. Indifference or negligence on the part of anyone places additional burdens on shipmates. The sea is no place for someone who is not prepared to take his/her role seriously and participate fully in the common effort. Everyone pitches in when necessary. By working together and helping out when needed, the voyage can be an unforgettable and rewarding time.

SEA Expedition is a physically active, fully participatory program. Seafaring activities are an integral part of the program. Previous sailing experience is not required, but physical fitness, mobility and general good health are important considerations. A medical form, signed by your physician, will be required.
